This walk now takes you across the extensive network of local footpaths and bridleways to the neighbouring village of Stallingborough. The ancient village of Stallingborough is recorded in the Domesday Book and earthworks showing its location are still visible outside the boundary of the current village to the west of church. For walkers wanting to take things a bit easier you can catch the train back to Healing from the station in the middle of the village. The remainder of the walk takes you back along footpaths to Healing, from the path you'll be able to look over the busy A180 to the Hummer Bank Industries that provide the area with employment and wealth.

Healing's Grade II listed parish church originates in the 13th Century and is dedicated to St Peter and St Paul. The upper parts of the tower are in decorated style and ashlared. After falling into a degree of disrepair much of the structure was rebuilt in the 19th Century thanks to money from local landowners.
